

Acknowledgments

It is unlikely I would have ever completed this work without the help and support from a number of groups and individuals.

My committee members, David Poole, Kris De Volder, and Tamara Munzner, asked hard but essential questions. This work is stronger as a result.

The students and faculty of the UBC Software Practices Lab and the Department of Computer Science provided a great atmosphere in which to learn and conduct research. I had not realized how rare it is to find such a friendly and supportive environment.

The students and faculty of the Software Research Lab at the University of Saskatchewan welcomed me to the prairies and provided me a foster home in which to complete my work. I would particularly like to thank Chris Dutchyn for his help in making sense of the theoretical aspects of my work.

My friends, both in Vancouver and elsewhere, helped keep me grounded. I would particularly like to thank Aaron Bergbusch and Siva Athreya for their timely support.

Gail Murphy, my supervisor, serves as an exemplar of a great supervisor. I stand in awe (and remain mildly embarrassed) at her ability to distil the essence from my purple prose.

Finally, Cheryl and my parents always kept faith that I would eventually complete this endeavour. This work serves as a testament to their love, support, and encouragement. I could not have finished this work without them.